Dr. Alexander V. Marriott is a political and intellectual historian of the Early American Republic, with a focus on war as a problem in republican thought. In 2022, he published a chapter on James K. Polk's performance as Commander-in-Chief during the Mexican War in James K. Polk and His Time: Essays at the Conclusion of the Polk Project. He is currently working on research related to George Washington's appointed emergency dictatorship during the American Revolution, as well as James Madison's conduct of the War of 1812. Dr. Marriott teaches American, Texas, and Mexican-American History.
